CLINICAL CASE :

Malaysia faces a critical public health crisis with "magic mushroom" vapes. The National Poison Centre of University Sains Malaysia has discovered these contain dangerous synthetic drugs, posing severe health risks including mental delirium, abnormal behavior, and potentially fatal poisoning. The crisis is particularly alarming due to increasing use among students. This presentation will explore challenges in addressing the crisis, which threatens public health, especially among young Malaysians. It necessitates immediate action from health authorities and policymakers to combat this deceptive and dangerous trend. By examining the complexities of this issue, we aim to identify effective strategies for intervention and prevention, safeguarding the well-being of Malaysia's youth and broader population
